Statistics, Science and Stories of Living to 100 in the National Capital

As Canberra celebrates its Centenary, more residents of the national capital can look forward to celebrating their 100th birthday. The ACT Division of the Australian Association of Gerontology (AAG) invites you to this Forum as its contribution to Canberra's Centenary. The Forum will showcase the latest research in population ageing and examine how the character of the national capital is changing as it ages. It will recognise Canberra's most long-lived citizens and raise awareness of how we can all age well.

The Forum brings together leading researchers who are involved in ageing research and centenarian studies in Australia and internationally. These expert speakers will present material in ways that will bring leading research to a wide professional and community audience, and you can join in the Q&A session on "Will we live as long?" The Forum also features video portraits of five Canberra citizens reflecting on their very long lives and a selection from Portrait 100, the ACT Office for Ageing Seniors' Photographic Competition.

About the Forum

As the AAG ACT Division's contribution to Canberra's Centenary Celebrations, the Forum addresses the aims of Canberra 100 by:

- Instilling pride in the achievements of Canberra researchers and others who have contributed to our understanding of ageing.
- Engaging with the community by bringing together members of the research and scientific community, the health and aged care community, Canberra seniors' organizations and individual seniors, and residents of all ages.
- Recognizing Canberra's most long lived citizens and their contributions to Canberra over their long lives.
- Showing how the character of Canberra is changing from a younger to an older community.
- Contributing to Canberra's legacy as a high profile, scientific event, that will be recorded through the Australian Association of Gerontology.
- Raising awareness of our future as older members of the community and how we can age well, achieving the best possible physical and mental health as we age.
